About the lectures

The fourteen century relationship between the Christian and Muslim communities is a long and complex one, with many different dimensions.

The first two decades of the twenty-first century have now seen a number of significant developments in Christian-Muslim relations around the world, whether in the strictly theological sense or in the broader cultural and political senses. Some of these are positive, whilst others are more negative.

This lecture will assess the current state of the relationship between the two communities, and suggest whether there is cause for optimism or for pessimism with regard to its future.

Professor Hugh Goddard

Hugh Goddard has worked and studied in the Middle East, in Lebanon, Jordan and Egypt, and has also undertaken a number of research visits to other regions of the Islamic World, including Pakistan, India, Nigeria, Malaysia, Indonesia and Central Asia.

He is the author of Christians and Muslims: From Double Standards to Mutual Understanding (London: Curzon, 1995), Muslim Perceptions of Christianity (London: Grey Seal, 1996), and A History of Christian-Muslim Relations (Edinburgh University Press and Chicago: New Amsterdam, 2000).
